In his bestselling book 1421: The Year China Discovered the World, Gavin Menzies revealed that it was the Chinese that discovered America, not Columbus. Now he presents further astonishing evidence that it was also Chinese advances in science, art, and technology that formed the basis of the European Renaissance and our modern world. Gavin Menzies makes the startling argument that a sophisticated Chinese delegation visited Italy in 1434, sparked the Renaissance, and forever changed the course of Western civilization. After that date the authority of Aristotle and Ptolemy was overturned and artistic conventions challenged, as was Arabic astronomy and cartography. Florence and Venice of the 15th century attracted traders from across the world. However, it is perfectly legitimate to discredit the claim that Zheng He's "magnificent Chinese fleet" sailed through the Mediterranean to Italy in 1434 given the incredible lack of textual, pictorial, or even archaeological evidence for such a grandiose claim. It is even more incredible to assert that Zheng He's tributary mission sparked the European Renaissance, a movement steeped in relearning the great innovations and discoveries made by the ancient Greeks and Romans. In trying to establish that the Chinese visit was the "spark that ignited the Renaissance," Menzies relies on a fundamental fallacy of logic: after-this-therefore-because-of-this reasoning.
