Introduction

This document is a compilation of most of the sources of information we have consulted in support of the “Who Built Our Capitol?” project being carried out by the Labor Education Service of the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities. This document contains information about the following types of primary and secondary research materials: newspapers, photographs, census records, web sites and books, and was obtained from the Minnesota Historical Society and several county historical societies, the Marble Valley Historical Society and Museum, the Minnesota Department of Health, and the Minnesota Genealogical Society, and numerous individuals. These scraps of information have slowly come together to paint a picture of the lives of the individuals who worked on the Capitol building, and for six men, their deaths on the work site.

The building cost $4.5 million to build. The "Who Built Our Capitol?" website from the Labor Education Service at the University of Minnesota reports that wages for construction and cleaning workers ranged from 30 cents an hour to 12.5 cents an hour, or about $1 a day. Even the first builders were annoyed by government mandates. The Minnesota Historical Society says that the most reports from the commission in charge of construction express frustration with the appropriation procedures mandated by the Legislature, which delayed construction and increased costs.

1898: Cornerstone laid by Alex The history of the United States Capitol Building begins in 1793. Since then, the U.S. Capitol has been built, burnt, rebuilt, extended and restored. The Capitol that we see today is the result of several major periods of construction; it stands as a monument to the ingenuity, determination and skill of the American people. View a timeline of milestones in the history of the Capitol Building on the Architect's Virtual Capitol. In accordance with the "Residence Act" passed by Congress in 1790, President George Washington in 1791 selected the area that is now the District of Colum
